CHARACTER HISTORY

Born 1122 B.G.N, Barius D'Averon is the youngest son of Temerous D'Averon, a Devonie highborne, and Aleistra, a great red dragon. Barius grew up in the shadow of his oldest brother, Talin, though it was the brother between them, Jerian, that felt the sting. Upon his coming of age, Barius was granted Ayesa, the twin to Talin's sword, Brann. The Twin swords were originally carried by their father. Jerian became upset by this break in tradition and left home. He hasn't been heard from since. Like so many young nobles, Barius spent much of his childhood and early adolescence humoring himself with pranks and mischief. He took to a particular prank he'd once heard Talin mention and began selling his prized sword to any merchant with coin enough to purchase it. Then, once the weapon was securely locked away, he'd summon it back to himself. The last time Barius saw his oldest brother was at Talin wedding to a human woman, Adalina. The pair left for their honeymoon like so many couple do, but the very next day Adalina returned without her new husband. Barius tried to find out what had happened but their father wouldn't allow him to get involved, stating "It's a matter of state." Unable to accept this answer, Barius collected his gear and set out in search of his brother. Several centuries have passed since his vow was made, that he'd find his brother and return him home, but the quest has been less than fruitful. Though in that time Barius has learned who he is and a bit about who he wants to become. Perhaps, by exploring this newly discovered land of Taldora, he'll unlock the secrets of his brother's disappearance. And if not, his adventures will better prepare him for the day his search comes to an end.
